Introduction

Ontario's Occupational Health and Safety Act is built upon the principle that employees and employers must act together to ensure a healthy and safe workplace environment.

An important way in which this goal may be furthered is through the work of joint health and safety committees and health and safety representatives.

This guide describes the work of those committees and representatives and explains their roles and responsibilities in the workplace.

About Joint Health and Safety Committees and Representatives

Committees

What is a joint health and safety committee?

A joint health and safety committee is composed of people who represent the employees and the employer. Together, they are committed to improving health and safety conditions in the workplace.

Committees identify potential health and safety problems and bring them to the employer's attention. As well, members must be kept informed of health and safety developments in the workplace.

Why are joint health and safety committees necessary?

Committees are necessary to provide greater protection against workplace injury and illness, and greater protection means reduced human suffering, work-related accidents and work-related deaths. Committees often involve people from all levels of an organization. This co-operative involvement ensures that everything possible is done to prevent health and safety hazards.

What is the joint health and safety committee's role?

The committee is an advisory body that helps to stimulate awareness of safety issues, recognizes workplace risks and then deals with these risks. To achieve its goal, the committee holds meetings and conducts regular workplace inspections.

Which workplaces need joint health and safety committees?

Workplaces that require committees include:

- any workplace that regularly employs 20 or more workers (section 9(2)(a));
- construction projects on which 20 or more workers are regularly employed and which are expected to last three months or more (sections 9(2)(a) and 9(1)(a));
- any workplace (other than a construction project) to which a regulation concerning a designated substance applies, even if fewer than 20 workers are regularly employed (section 9(2)(c));
- any workplace where an order has been issued under section 20 of the Act, even if fewer than 20 workers are regularly employed (section 9(2)(b)); and
- a workplace ordered to do so by the Minister of Labour (section 9(3)).

How large should a joint health and safety committee be?

In workplaces with 20 to 49 employees, the Act requires that the committee have a minimum of two members (section 9(6)(a)). Where 50 or more workers are employed, the committee must have at least four members (section 9(6)(b)). At least half the members on a committee must represent workers (section 9(7)), with the balance representing management (section 9(9)). Larger committees in larger workplaces can be required by regulations under the Act (section 70(2)10.).

Whenever possible, committees should represent the health and safety concerns of the entire workplace. For example, if a workplace has a plant, office, laboratory and warehouse, each of these areas should be represented on the committee.

What about workplaces with fewer than 20 employees?

Usually, workplaces with more than five but fewer than 20 employees are not required to have a joint health and safety committee.

Instead, workers must select one employee as a health and safety representative (section 8(1)).

Workplaces with five or fewer employees are exempt from the requirements in section 9 of the Act, which regulate joint health and safety committees, and from the requirement for a health and safety representative (section 8(1)).

What if there is a dispute about the establishment or function of a joint health and safety committee?

The Ministry of Labour should be alerted to any dispute about the establishment, function or composition of a committee. Upon investigation, the minister may issue an order to an employer to improve the function of a committee (sections 9(3), 9(5) and 9(39)).

What is a worker trades committee? When is one required?

Construction projects that are expected to last three months or longer and employ 50 or more workers must establish a worker trades committee in addition to a joint health and safety committee (section 10(1)).

Members of the worker trades committee must represent workers employed in each of the trades at the workplace (section 10(2)). These members must be selected by workers employed in the trades they represent or, if a trade union represents workers, by the union (section 10(3)).

The committee's primary responsibility is to inform the joint health and safety committee of any health and safety concerns that trade workers might have (section 10(4)).

Members

How are committee members selected?

At least half the committee members must be worker members: non-management employees at the workplace who are selected by the workers. In a unionized workplace, the worker members must be chosen by the trade union or unions representing employees (sections 9(7) and 9(8)).

The employer chooses members as well (employer members) (section 9(9)). It is recommended that the employer select representatives by giving consideration to their knowledge of operations and to their duties and responsibilities as they relate to work procedures and safety.

Ex-officio members are not recommended. When dealing with a specific issue, however, the committee may wish to invite persons with specialized knowledge or experience to attend as advisers or observers.

Do committee members need special training or certification?

At least two committee members - one representing the employer and one representing workers - must be chosen for special training (section 9(12)). Ontario's Workplace Health and Safety Agency sets the standards for training and certifies members who complete special training programs (section 16(1)). Certified health and safety committee members play a key role on the committee and have specific authority and responsibilities. Requirements for having certified members on a committee will be specified by regulation (sections 70(2)(13) and 70(2)(32)).*

Other specialized training is available through workplace organizations and outside agencies. Although it is beneficial for all members to have adequate training, it is not a requirement under the Act.

How long is a committee member's term of office?

A committee member should serve for at least one year. Where there is more than one worker member and one employer member, terms should be staggered to allow continuity. Vacancies should be filled as quickly as possible.

Do committee members get paid for their time?

Members are entitled to take time to attend committee meetings, inspections and investigations, as well as to accompany ministry inspectors investigating an accident, potential hazard or a work refusal (sections 9(34) and 54(5)). Members will be paid at either their regular rate or, where applicable (i.e. when duties take them beyond their usual hours of work), their premium rate of pay (section 9(35)).

Are committee members entitled to paid preparation time?

Each member will be paid for one hour of preparation time before every committee meeting. If it becomes apparent that one hour is not sufficient, the committee can decide that more paid preparation time is required (section 9(34)(a)).

 The Workplace Health and Safety Agency will recommend certification requirements to the government, which will make regulations to bring this provision into force. Therefore, until such regulations are made, the provision does not apply. When regulations are made, the Ministry of Labour will take steps to inform all affected parties.

How often should the joint health and safety committee meet?

Committee members should meet at the workplace at least once every three months. More frequent meetings may be necessary, however, particularly in industries where hazardous substances or procedures are involved (section 9(33)).

Who chairs the meeting?

Committee meetings must be co-chaired by two members. One of the co-chairpersons is chosen by the members who represent workers, the other by members who represent the employer (section 9(11)). It is good practice to alternate the chairing of each meeting between the two chairpersons, although the committee may find other, more appropriate procedures.

How is an agenda prepared?

The agenda is prepared by the co-chairpersons and distributed one week in advance of the meeting date. Members who wish to have items added to the agenda should give chairpersons ample notice.

How are committee members informed of upcoming meetings?

Meeting dates should be established on a pre-set schedule or at the conclusion of each committee meeting. This date will be recorded in the minutes of the meeting. A copy of the minutes should be distributed to members a few days after the meeting. The dates of upcoming meetings should also be recorded at the top of each agenda.

Is a quorum needed to hold a meeting?

Every meeting must have members present who represent the employees and the employer. Otherwise, the committee should determine its own rules for a quorum at meetings.

Must the minutes be recorded? What should the minutes include?

Minutes of each meeting must be recorded and made available for review by an inspector from the Ministry of Labour (section 9(22)). Minutes should contain details of all matters discussed, as well as a full description of problems and their resolution or any action deemed necessary. Minutes should identify members by title and not by name. (Members' names should be used only for attendance purposes.)

Minutes should be signed by the co-chairpersons and posted in the workplace within one week of the meeting.

Health and Safety Representatives

What is a health and safety representative?

Workplaces with more than five but fewer than 20 employees must have a health and safety representative (section 8(1)). Like joint health and safety committee members, the representative is committed to improving health and safety conditions in the workplace.

The health and safety representative is selected by employees at the workplace or, where the workplace is unionized, by the trade union (section 8(5)). The representative does not require special training or certification and, like committee members, he or she is entitled to take paid time to attend inspections and investigations (section 8(15)).

Roles and Responsibilities

Committees

What are the committee's principal functions?

The committee has four principal functions: to identify potential hazards, to evaluate these potential hazards, to recommend corrective action and to follow up implemented recommendations. To carry out its functions, the committee is required to hold meetings (section 9(33)) and carry out regular inspections of the workplace (sections 9(26), 9(27) and 9(28)).

In some cases, committees must also participate in the development of assessment reports and control-program reports required under the designated substances regulations.

Generally speaking, however, all committee members should be available to receive employee concerns, complaints and recommendations; to discuss problems and recommend solutions; and to provide input into existing and proposed health and safety programs.

How often must workplace inspections be carried out?

Regular inspections help to identify hazards and prevent accidents. The workplace must be inspected at least once a month, unless a different schedule of inspections is ordered by the Ministry of Labour (section 9(26)). In cases where the workplace is too large or where parts are shut down on a seasonal basis, the committee should establish a monthly inspection schedule that ensures the entire workplace will be inspected at least once a year (section 9(27)).

Who carries out workplace inspections?

Committee members who represent workers must select someone in their group to inspect the workplace (section 9(23)). If possible, this person should be a certified member (section 9(24)). When a real or potential hazard is discovered, this member must report it to the committee (section 9(30)).

Do certified members have added responsibilities?

Because certified members receive special training in workplace health and safety, they are given added responsibilities. For example, certified employer and employee representatives can, under certain circumstances, act together and order the employer to stop work that is dangerous to a worker (section 45(4)).

Health and Safety Representatives

Does a health and safety representative have different responsibilities from a committee member?

Generally speaking, a health and safety representative has the same responsibilities and powers as a joint committee member. These include:

- identifying workplace hazards (section 8(10));
- inspecting the workplace at least once a month (section 8(6));
- being consulted about workplace testing (section 8(11));
- making recommendations to the employer (section 8(10)); and
- investigating work refusals (section 43(4)) and serious accidents (section 8(14)).

Employer

What are the employer's responsibilities regarding joint health and safety committees?

The employer must provide a location for meetings (section 9(33)) and choose a committee member or members (section 9(9)).

Other employer responsibilities include informing the committee of any work-related accidents involving injury, death or occupational illness (section 52), and providing the committee with the results of any reports relating to health and safety in the workplace (section 25(2)(1)).

Must an employer act on committee recommendations?

The employer must provide a written response to committee recommendations within 21 days (section 9(20)). If the recommendations are accepted, a timetable for action must be outlined and provided to the committee (section 9(21)). If an employer decides against acting on the committee's recommendations, reasons must be given in writing (section 9(21)).

Ministry of Labour Inspectors

What is the role of Ministry of Labour inspectors?

Ministry of Labour inspectors uphold and enforce the Act. They inspect the workplace and investigate potentially hazardous situations, accidents and work refusals. An inspector may issue orders where there is a contravention of the Act, and may provide advice and mediation where there are disputes between workplace parties.

What contact will committee members and health and safety representatives have with the inspector?

A committee member or the health and safety representative must accompany the inspector on all inspections and investigations (section 54(3)). When orders are issued by the inspector, a copy of the orders should be given to the committee or representative (section 57(10)). Inspectors are entitled to review the minutes of committee meetings (section 9(22)), and are expected to do so. Inspectors may attend committee meetings when invited by members.

General Procedures

Committee Members and Health and Safety Representatives

How does the committee or health and safety representative deal with worker complaints?

A worker must report any hazard or contravention of the Act to the employer or supervisor (sections 28(1)(c) and 28(1)(d)). If the matter is not resolved, a worker should then refer it to a member of the committee or to a representative.

When such matters are referred to a committee member, the member should:

- ask a first-line supervisor, plant safety officer or person with designated responsibility in the area to take part in resolving the problem;
- have this request noted at the next committee meeting and recorded in the minutes; and
- notify the worker who reported the concern of a decision or recommendation made by the committee.

If a worker complaint cannot be resolved, either of the co-chairpersons should inform the employer. If the employer is unable to resolve the issue, either the employer or the worker should contact a Ministry of Labour inspector, who will review the situation and render a decision.

When such matters are referred to a representative, he or she should:

 ask a first-line supervisor, plant safety officer or person with designated responsibility in the area to take part in resolving the problem; and notify the worker who reported the concern once a decision or recommendation has been made.

If a worker complaint cannot be resolved, the representative should inform the employer. If the employer is unable to resolve the issue, either the employer or the worker should contact a Ministry of Labour inspector, who will review the situation and render a decision.

What should the committee or health and safety representative do in the event of a work refusal?

The representative or a committee member who represents employees must be present during the investigation of a work refusal (section 43(4)). This investigation is most often conducted by the worker's supervisor.

If the issue is not resolved, the employer, the worker or a committee member/representative must notify a Ministry of Labour inspector (section 43(6)). The worker member/representative, the employer or employer member, and the worker must be present while the inspector conducts his or her investigation (section 43(7)).

What should the committee or health and safety representative do in the event of an injury or death?

Worker members of the committee must designate one or more worker members to investigate any accident in which a person is killed or critically injured (section 9(31)). The committee members (section 9(31)) or representative (section 8(14)) should inspect the place where the accident occurred as well as any relevant machine, device or thing.

Following the investigation, all findings must be reported to the committee and to the Ministry of Labour (section 9(31)). It is the responsibility of the committee (section 9(18)(b)) or representative (section 8(10)) to evaluate the situation and recommend actions to prevent a similar accident in the future.

What sort of information can the committee or health and safety representative expect to obtain?

The committee (section 9(18)(d)) or representative (section 8(11)(c)) can expect to obtain information regarding hazardous materials, processes or equipment. As well, the employer must share any knowledge of health and safety practices and standards in the industry (sections 9(18)(d)(ii) and 25(2)(l)).

The employer must report lost-time injuries caused by accident, explosion or fire at the workplace, and must report any occupational illnesses of which he or she has knowledge (section 52).

Under the regulations for designated substances, the employer must provide each member of the committee or the representative with a copy of the assessment and control-program reports. As well, the committee or representative should receive reports from the physician examining the health of workers who are under a medical surveillance program required by each regulation. The employer must provide the committee or representative with results of tests on both airborne concentrations of the substance and worker exposure to it.

The Workers' Compensation Board, at the request of the committee or representative, is required to send an annual summary of data relating to number of fatalities, lost workday cases, workdays lost, non-fatal cases requiring medical care (but not involving lost workdays) and number of occupational illnesses (section 12).

What assistance can the committee or health and safety representative expect from the employer?*

The Act places a general duty on an employer to assist the functioning of the committee and the representative (section 25(2)(e)). More specific responsibilities include:

- upon the request of the committee (section 9(18)(d)(i)) or representative (section 8(11)(c)(i)), provide information regarding the identification of potential or existing hazards involving materials, processes or equipment;
- upon request, inform the committee (section 9(18)(d)) or representative (section 8(11)(c)) of changes in work procedures, of the introduction of new machinery or processes, of the use of new chemicals and other materials and of the availability of new safety equipment;
- provide the committee or representative with a copy of all orders or reports issued to the employer by an inspector of the Ministry of Labour (section 57(10));

When acting as the representative of the employer, a supervisor assumes legal responsibilities of the employer.

- provide a worker member of the committee or a representative with the opportunity to accompany a Ministry of Labour inspector on the physical inspection of the workplace (section 54(3));
- afford a worker member of the committee (section 9(26)) or a representative (section 8(6)) of the right to inspect the physical condition of the workplace at least once a month, and provide required information and assistance (sections 9(29) and 8(9)); and
- provide the information required under the designated substances regulations where they apply to the workplace.

It is an offence for an employer to knowingly hinder or interfere with, or to give false information to, the joint health and safety committee or to a committee member or a health and safety representative who is in the process of performing his or her duties under the Act.

What assistance can the committee or health and safety representative expect from workers?

Workers are expected to provide information and assistance as may be required by a committee member or representative conducting an inspection or investigation. A worker must not interfere or knowingly provide a committee member or representative with false information.

What are the committee's and the health and safety representative's responsibilities regarding confidential information?

Committee members and representatives are responsible for maintaining rules of confidentiality, except where disclosure of information is specifically required by the Act or by another law (section 63(1)).

In this regard, committee members or representatives must not disclose any secret manufacturing process or trade information; any information about any workplace tests or inquiries conducted under the Act or regulations; or the name of any person from whom information is received. Information obtained from medical examinations and tests may be disclosed only in a manner that does not identify anyone (section 63(1)(f)).
